PASTOR'S BLOG
NOVEMBER 24, 2024

Many thanks to Adriene for sharing about the domestic life that she is now experiencing as a newly wed. From time to time, I think about what it would have been like to be married, have children and live the vocation of being a husband. Then people share about their married lives and I become thankful for the vocation as a celibate priest. And what is beautiful is that both vocations are to mutually enrich each other. So, let's keep up our prayers for an increase in vocations to the priesthood, the religious life and to married life.

One of the interesting aspects of being a priest is that we do not get weekends off. (Obviously!) Rather, we get a day off or as I like to call it, a day away from the parish. The reason for that is because the priesthood is a vocation, we never really get a day off from being a priest, but we certainly need a break from parish ministry. For myself, I use it as a day to break from the daily routines and disciplines that I have while I am at the parish. What does this entail? Well, the first thing is I get a lot more sleep. Usually I am in bed by 10:30/11pm and I wake up around 8am. This is a stark contrast from waking up at 4:30am at the parish. The second thing is that I have been keeping my day away from the parish as a rest day from exercise. The exercise plans that I have been using give a couple of rest days, so it is nice for my body to get extra sleep and recovery time. Both, the extra sleep and recovery time contribute to my mind getting more alert while managing stress in a healthy way.

We never take a day off or a day away from prayer, so while I am not at the parish, I am still in parish ministry in my prayers. I continue to say the Divine Office, I have my mental prayer with Sacred Scripture, I pray my rosary and I celebrate Holy Mass.

As a priest in the rectory, I usually have my meals alone. In the health and wellness circles, "mindful eating" is something being emphasized. This means that we eat while not watching a screen. I usually follow that but still have something on in the background, usually a podcast. The difference about my day away from the parish is that I have meals with my parents, which is always a highlight. The fellowship around a meal is a lot of fun, lots of laughter and joy.

When I am not praying, or having meals with my parents, I am usually in my room watching something on tv. This is where my binge watching goes into full throttle mode. Once I find a good tv show, it's game over...I will binge watch it. It is a very bad habit that I do not recommend!

It is also on my day away from the parish that I meet up with friends that I have made along the way in my life. It is a great time to connect with them and where the mutual sharing of life happens. A lot of these friends have built up their families with lots of little (and not so little) children running around. I began with being affirmed in the vocation to the priesthood by people sharing about marriage with me. It is equally true to witness the joys and trials of family life that I am affirmed and thankful in my vocation to the priesthood.

I love being a Catholic priest!
